Winterslow, Wilts
Sold

Mancett House

A rare opportunity to purchase and update a large single-storey steel and glass house designed by Michael Manser, one of Britain's finest Modern architect.

Designed in 1974, the 5-bedroom house has an internal area of approximately 2,700 sq ft and is set in attractive gardens on a site of approximately 1¼ acres. This is the first time that this house, one of Manser's most accomplished designs, has ever been on the market. The house is being offered in outstanding original condition. Manser is well known for being an architect of exacting standards and Mancett House is a fine example of the quality of his buildings.

A former President of the RIBA and architecture critic of The Observer, Michael Manser is perhaps the purest purveyor of the Modern style in Britain. The designer of a number of steel-frame houses, some of which are now Grade-II listed, Mancett House was built at a time when Manser was at the height of his powers.

THE MODERN HOUSE

Mancett House

The house is located down an unmade track in the village of East Winterslow on the Wiltshire / Hampshire border. The track is an old Roman way that is now a quiet residential road leading to open countryside. There is a village shop in Winterslow and it is also home to the New Art Centre at Roche Court. The larger towns of Stockbridge and Salisbury are within 10 miles of Winterslow. Trains run from Salisbury or nearby Andover to London Waterloo in approximately 1½ hours. There is a smaller station nearby at West Dean. London can be reached by car in approximately 1½ to 2 hours. The New Forest can be reached by car in 20 minutes and the coast can be reached in approximately 40 minutes.

There is a good village primary school and numerous well-regarded secondary schools in the area including Bishop's Wordsworth Grammar School and South Wilts Grammar for Girls.
